What Would You Do?

Responding to conflict, teasing, and bullying

Read the following scenarios involving conflict, teasing, and bully. Think about how you could appropriately respond to these situations in a nonviolent way. Try to think of different ways to respond to each scenario.

Scenarios	How Could You Respond
Imagine that you are the slowest kid in the class. No one seems to notice until PE. During PE, another student says to you "I'm so much faster than you."
While getting on the school bus, you walk down the aisle to find your seat. Everyday, you sit with your friend. Today, your friend is sitting with someone else and states, "You can't sit here." You respond with, "If you move your backpacks, we can all sit together." Your friend responds, "We don't want you to sit with us."
Imagine that your new teeth are growing in very crooked. During lunch, a student says to you, "What is wrong with your teeth?" and laughs in your face.
Imagine that you are playing a game during recess. You tag a student and yell "You are out." The other student responds, "You did not tag me." You are so mad

Imagine that several students in the class have picked on you because of your weight. While you pretend it doesn't bother you, it really hurts your feelings. Today, a student has made several mean comments to you on the playground.
